Doris and Russ were wonderful neighbours to my family for many years. My parents were immigrants who started a camping business in Wasaga, but also owned a farmhouse just up the road from the D'Eathe family. Doris and Russ complemented each other perfectly. Bold and outgoing, Russ would welcome you to his front door and walk you down to his fantastic vegetable garden in the back, pointing out all the fencing and chicken wire he had installed to keep the deer from eating his produce. Doris was the smiling listener, always attentive, always welcoming, understanding and never judgemental. A few years ago, my wife and I went to visit her and when she answered her door, she instantly recognized me and welcomed us both into her home. Russ and my parents had passed many years before, yet Doris was as interested in my family, my work, my interests as if we had talked only the day before. She invited us to come back for lunch. When we returned a few days later, she served a lovely meal and although I don't remember exactly what it was, I remember feeling so comfortable, so happy to be speaking with her and finding out about her vibrant social life. Doris was a gracious lady who I will remember fondly each time I drive past her house in Wasaga.
